Watch Now My little review of a few of the albums released since January this year. Enjoy. The Coronas – The Coronas It's been a bit quiet on the music front lately – but it's almost never a bad thing, especially when it's all such good stuff. So, at long last, I've come back to this album. I've been interested for a long time, particularly with the years it's been out, and with the excellent website that gives background on each of the pieces. The Coronas are particularly interesting because they work so well as a solo pianist, and yet I'm sure that, together, they can certainly make some excellent music. Their live show is amazing, too, and I'm looking forward to seeing them when they come to Edinburgh. Tracks: Meditation Bazamba Sue You Vampires Get Off This Home Sweet Home And You Will Be Mine The Opal Ensemble – Opal Ensemble The Opal Ensemble is a brass band from Belgium that specializes in music that features the work of 16th century Italian composer Ludovico Borghi. As well as just straight musical pieces, they also perform music and lyrics that have been inspired by Borghi. This album features a couple of pieces from their 2006 album Borghi's Music and an excellent cover version of a song by 'The Cleaning Lady'. Track: Aquilani Aquilani – by Borghi 'Aquilani', which is a pretty straightforward piece, is one of the first pieces to have been written by Borghi, when he was a child. It's a piece of music that's become almost as famous as Borghi himself, due to its inclusion in a couple of films, and on one occasion an entire series. All three films are available to watch on the YouTube video below. Musica Cantata 82157476af
